Police officers enforce their idea of gender appropriate behavior. Noncisgender people of color do not fit into their white supremacist heteropatriarchal narrative, so their very presence is seen as an act of disorder or disturbing the peace.

Broken windows policing is the concept that if disorder and minor crimes go unchecked, communities will become chaotic. The focus of this type of policing is on people who are seen as "problem bodies" such as noncisgender people of color.

Classification anxiety is the discomfort police officers feel when they encounter people noncisgender people who do not fit their gender binary narrative.
As a result, they implicitly view noncisgender people as threatening.
